T is an Observation made by one of my Predecessors, and an Observation, in my Opinion, at once ingenious and well supported, That the Inhabitants of the most distant Countries, do not differ from each other more in their Customs and Ways of living, than the Inhabitants of the several Parts of this great City. But as Historians observe that Nations very frequently alter their Manners, and that in a Succession of Years, People differ from Themselves, as much as from their Neighbours; so I cannot think it at all improper to preserve in Papers of this Nature, an Account of such extraordinary Revolutions as happen from time to time among the most distinguished Tribes in that huge Mass circumscribed within the Bills of Mortality. A General History, built on this Principle, would certainly be very entertaining as well as instructive; but as this is not to be expected suddenly, I shall content myself with offering to the View of the Publick a short Specimen in that Way, under the Title of

MEMOIRS of the SMARTS;

And, according to the Reception it meets with, finall either proceed in, or discontinue my Refearches as to the Present State of the Good People of London and Westminster, and the Variations that have happened for these twenty Years last past, in the Religion, Learning, Morals, Trade, Taste, and publick Diversions; concerning all which I have already drawn together a very considerable Stock of Materials.

— But to my Specimen.

TO proceed methodically, I ought to take Notice of the Origin of those whose Hutory I write; and I ought likewise to set down the Names by which they have been known. But as the Investigation of these Heads is consecular to be the drieft and least is generally observed to be the driest and least useful Part of all Histories, I humbly conceive that my Succinctness in these Points will deserve rather than Censure that my Succinctness in these Points will deserve Praise, rather than Censure.

As to their Origin, I shall content myself with observing, that it is as observe, and consequently as antient, as that of any Nation in the World; since there is not any History of this great Metropolis, which doth not mention the People of whom I write, as great and flourishing, even at the Distance of many Hundred Years, as the learned and inquisitive Reader may find by consulting Hellingsted and Steen, as to Masques, Turnaments, and Coronation Feasts, when these Folks distinguished themselves always in a particular manner.

W:TH Regard to Names, I must crave leave to refer myself to Sir Philip Sidney, Shakespeare, Johnson, Beaumont and Fletcher, Skirley, Broome, and the other Antiquaries in that Way; fince a List of them only would take up at least a Column. At present they go by different Names; they call themselves Beaus, their Enemies call them Fops, and the rest of the World Smarts; but all agree that they are precisely the same Sort of People known in France by the Name of Petits Maitres.

As to the Religion of the Smarts, like most other Religions, though it hath varied in its Terms, yet in Fundamentals it hath always been pretty much the same: At present, the Established Church hath given its Negative Faith the Title of Free-thinking; and hence every Smart who is not to all Intents and Purpose a Free-thinker, is held but a Denni-Smart, or, to keep to religious Phrases, a Diffenter. By Free-thinking, you must know, these Gentlemen mean an absolute Expulsion from their Thoughts of all Religious Tenets as held by the Vulgar; and their Minds being thus free, that is empty, they are again filled with this fingle Proposition, which being light and short, is fit for a Free-thinker's Greed, ALL THINGS ARE LAWFUL THAT ARE PLEASANT. In consequence of this, they are always at Ease, or appear to be so, though their Conduct would make any other Man miserable: For Example; they run in Debs without Thought; they debauch Women without Scruple; they ruin their Families without Scruple; they ruin their Families without Remorse: But then they wear fine Cloaths, drink fine Wine, keep fine Women, are at every fine Sight: And, when they can lead this fine Lise no longer, close it by a fine Death, which is usually administred by their own Hands.

In speaking of the Religion, I have also com-own Hands.

In speaking of the Religion, I have also comprehended the Morals of this illustrious People; and from thence a Transition to their Learning is very natural, and consequently very proper. As to the dead Languages, the very Epither disgusts them; Latin has something in it of the School-Bey, and as for Greek, its pale-faced Letters disgust the Eyes of the Smarts, for many Reasons, and especially for this, that it takes up a great deal of Time to be well acquainted with them. French and Italian therefore are the with them. French and Italian therefore are the Learned Languages with them: In the former, those of the greatest Eminence converse, in the latter they sing, one and all. It is an establish d Maxim, That there is no Harmony in English, and that an Italian Air is the most charming Thing in the World, though it has nothing but a Redundance in Vowels to recommend it. Many of my Predecessors have rallied the Smarts upon this Subject, as if they acted whimsically and ridiculously; but, with the leave of my Predecessors, they are in the wrong, and the Smarts are in this, as in most other Things, a very consistent and polite Nation. As their Discourse generally relates to Tristes, and as Tristes are expressed with peculiar Elegance in French, they shew the Rectitude of their Judgments in making this the Language of their Schools, Again; as the Poetry of the Modern Italians is of all others the least burthened with Sentiment, it is as the Poetry of the Modern Italians is of all others the least burthened with Sentiment, it is by so much the fitter for these Gentlemen, who would be always easy, and who besides, from a Religious Principle, detest such Verses as convey the Maxims of Vulgar Morality, which tend to abridge the Liberty of Acting, and hinder Men from pursuing the great End of their Being, that is —— Pleasure. A Smart's Study therefore consists, first, of Books of Devotion; such as the Works of Blount, Teland, Wealston, and Passeran: For these Folk are very pious in their Way, and it is thought that there is not one of them who does not make use of the Philosopher's Prayer as often as ever its Author did. As to the Sciences; Boyer's Grammar and Distinary, with Veneron's Italian Masser, and a competent number of Musick Books, complete the Shelf. For Amusement, La Fontaine's Tales, the Earl of Rochesser's Works, and a Prose Version of Meursius, together with occassional Treatists at they come out fill the Glasses.

the Earl of Rochester's Works, and a Profe Verfion of Meursius, together with occasional Treatises, as they come out, fill the Glass-Case.

As to Trade, nothing is more common than to hear the Enemies of the Smarts upbraiding them with their Aversion to it: But how loud soever Calumny raises her Voice, we ought always to suspect the Truth of what she says, of which the present Case affords us a memorable Instance:
The Smarts are universally a Trading People;
but then 'their Trade, like their Religion and Morals, is of a Sort peculiar to themselves; as they hate Incumbrance and Trouble, instead of Books of Accompts, they make use of little Slips of Painted Paper, vulgarly called Cards; instead of Bales of Goods, they deal in Bales of Dice;
but then their Trade is very extensive, occasions
a quick Circulation, and is managed, as all the World knows, altogether upon Homer. It is true, that the ordinary Rank of People will not allow Gaming to be a Trade: What then? We live in an Age which gives no Quarter to vulgat Errors, and I can demenstrate this to be one upon the Spot. There is said to be a Mystery in Trade, and separate Mysteries in all its Branches; it is exactly the same Case in Play; there is one Mystery regards the Whole, and yet there is a Mystery in every Part: An Adept in Ombre may suffer by dealing in Picquet; and I have known a Man who became a Person of Worth by his Skill in Bask-Gamon, come to want Shoes by launching out his Money at Hazard. In Trade, Skill and Assiduity are of mighty Consequence; they are so likewise in Gaming; and, for the Honour of the Smarts he it spoken, we seldom see them desicient in either: Many a fine Gentleman practifes Elliards who were never ten Minutes in a Courch, have spens ther: Many a fine Gentleman practifes Fillia ds twelve Hours in a Day, and feveral Smarts, who were never ten Minutes in a Geurch, have spent the Sunday complete, that is, from Saturdey Midnight, to Monday Morning, in continual Buncles in a certain Compting-House in Count-Garden. But as in Trade the grand Secret is a certain Jene sign quoi, not reducible to the Rules of down-right Honesty; so in Play there is a kind of taking leave of Honesur for a Moment, without which a Man can never make a Figure in the Business. But to proceed.

Bufiness. But to proceed.

I need scarce put the Publick in mind that the Smarts are as it were the sole Auchors of our Publick Diversions: At the Theatre they have a Majority in the Pit and Boxes: To them the Opera owed its Subsistence; and Vaux-Hall, the agreeable Vaux Hall I would be a Wilderness without them.

sgreeable Vaux Hall I would be a Wilderness without them.

It is clear then, even from this short and imperfect History of the Smarts, that they are a wise and happy Nation: Wise, because one Principle runs through their Religion, their Learning, their Morals, their Trade, their ordinary Behaviour, and their Diversions: They are bappy, in right of their continual Absonce of Thought, their generous Contempt of Fame, Fortune, and Salvation, which take up other Peoples Cares. And they are likewise singularly distinguished by the Honours done them by our Modern Patriots, who have very judiciously chosen most of their Chiefs, and their Writers to a Man, from amongst them.

After this, to add any thing by way of Panegyrick, would be quite against the Rules; and therefore, to avoid offending by any Impropriety these perfectly polite Persons, to the Praise of whom I have dedicated this Paper, I must here put an End to it, by recommending it to their peculiar Protection.

R. FREEMAN.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

THE last Advices which the Court of Petersburg received from the Count de Munich say, that after he had rested a sew Days with his Army near Little Ingul, he continued his March, and arrived the fixth Instant near Great Ingul, which is very near half way from Perewolowna to the River Bog.

The faid Court has received Advice from the Velt Marshal de Lascy, that the Tartars are so weaken'd by their several Engagements with the Russians, that 20,000 Men is the greatest Number the Kan has been able to assemble, and with these he is encamped on this Side Perecop: That there is a great Missunderstanding between the Turks and Tartars, the for mer reproaching the latter that they have not Courage to keep the Field when they are attacked, and the Tartars on their Part, accusing the Turks for not performing their Promife to defend the For-trefles of the Crim: That these Circumstances, and the Misery which they suffer in that Coun-try, made the Generality of the common People desirous of submitting to the Czarina, the the Chiefs opposed it with all their Might.

The Advices which the Court of Petersburg, has received from their Resident at Hadan say.

has received from their Resident at Ispahan say, has received from their Relident at Ipparation, that the Bashaw of Bagdet having revolted against the Grand Seignior, and proposed to make his Submission to Kouli Kan, 'twas believed that the latter would take the Advantage of his Offer, and break with the Porte. 'Tis of his Offer, and break with the Porte. Tis confirm'd, that an Ambassador from Kouli Kan is arrived at Affracan, in his Way to Petersburg, but he cannot set out from thence till he has perform'd Quarantain, because he came through the Province of Ghilan, where the Plague rages with great Figure.

the Province of Ghilan, where the Plague rages with great Fory.

A Quarrel happened lately at Petersburg betwixt fome Rushams and the Domeslicks of the Persian Ambainador now at that Court, which was carried to such a Height, that three Persians and one Rusham was kill'd upon the Spot.

The 17th Instant a dismal Fire happened at Wybourgh, in Finland, which in a very few Hours consumed all the Town to Ashee, except two Churches; but the Powder Magazine was not blown up, so that the Fortifications remain entire.

Letters from Vienna give the following Account of an Action that has happened between the Turks and Imperialifs, Advice of which was brought to that Court by Count de Pertufati, Aid de Camp to the Great Duke of Tufcany.

On the 20th of June, while the Army was on the March from Carencebes to Slatina, feveral Turkish Parties appeared upon the Hills, from whence they endeavoured to incommode the Troops; but the Hussars gave them Chace, and defeated feveral of them in Skirmishes: during which the Germans lost them Chace, and defeated feveral of them in Skirmifhes; during which the Germans loft about 30 Men. Next Day the Army encamp'd at Tregova, and on the 22d arrived at Corola, where it continued all Day. From this Camp they discovered some of the Enemies Parties rendezvousing again on the neighbouring Hill-, to the Number of at least 10,000 Men; and they resolved to march against them bouring Hills, to the Number of at leaft 10,000 Men; and they refolved to march against them next Day, viz the 23d, as soon as it was Light; but the Army being obliged to advance by Detachments, by reason of the Narrowness of the Defiles, and Unevenness of the Ways, it could not be done. At Norn General Scher acquainted the Grand Duke and the Count de Konigseg, that another of the Enemies Parties was forming itself on a great Hill opposite to the Left of the Imperial Army, and that the other Troops which had been discovered upon the neighbouring Hills, still continued in their Posts. It appeared by the Help of Spying-Glasses, that this Body of Augmentation consisted of Janizarics and Spahis; and a Turkish Bashaw being discovered sitting under a Tent, with being discovered sitting under a Tent, with the military Musick about him, it was conbeing discovered sixting under a Tent, with the military Musick about him, it was concluded that the Seraskier of Widdin was there in Person. The Enemy bending their chief Force towards the lest Wing of the Imperial Army, the same was reinforc'd, and the other Wing was brought as near to it as the Ground would admit of, that there might be no Chasm in the Centre for the Enemy to break through. The lest Wing being thus reinforc'd, gain'd the Hill, and charg'd the Turkish Troops of Augmentation that were come to post themselves there, with Vigour. During this, the other Parties of the Enemy, who possesses the neighbouring Hills, came down upon the Imperialists with great Fury, and prodigious Shouts, with a View to break the Front Line and penetrate to the Centre, which obliged his Royal Highness to bring up the second Line to join the first, so that the Army form'd as it were but one Line. The Enemy broke into it in two Places, on the Right and Lest. The Velt Marshal Phillipi, who was at the Head of a Regiment of Cuitassing the second of the Right and Lest. Right and Left. The Velt Marshal Phillipi, who was at the Head of a Regiment of Cui-rassiers, repulsed them twice on the Right; and the Turks who made the greatest Push against the less Wing, with the Janizaries, were as vigorously repussed by the Velt Marshal Count de Wallis; who reupon the whole Line advanced towards the Enemy, who finding it impossible to break it, retir'd in very good Order. This Action lasted from one of Clock in the Afternaon till five, when there good Order. This Action lasted from one o'Clock in the Afternoon till five, when there sell such a Shower of Rain that the Imperialist could not make use of their Fire Arms; and it was so late, that they could not pursue the Turks above a Mile. The Uncertainty whether the laster might not renew the pursue the Turks above a Mile. The Uncertainty whether the latter might not renew the Attack next Day, determined the Great Duke and the Marshal, to incamp with the Army near Cornia.

The Loss which the Imperial Army has sustained in this Engagement is variously reported, some making it to amount to 1000 Men killed and wounded, and others but to 500. There were several Officers kill'd, particularly Col. Rusch of Bareith's Regiment; the Count de Trautson, Captain of the Grenadiers in Khevenhuller's Regiment, two other Captains of Grenadiers, and sour other Captains in the Regiment of Count Maximilian de Starenberg. There were also several wounded; particularly the Count de Lamberg, a Colonel in Khevenhuller's Regiment, who was shot in the Thigh. The Loss of the Turks must be much more considerable; but 'its impossible to know the Number of their Killed and Wounded, because, The Loss which the Imperial Army has Number of their Killed and Wounded, because, according to their Custom, they carry'd off their Dead even during the hottest Part of the Action; however they lest behind them one of their chief Standards, and sour Pieces of Cannon. The Count de Perusair reports, that on the Day after the Battle, the Army march'd again in pursuit of the Enemy, and took Possessin in Express from the Great Duke of Tustany, to bring the Emperor the News. His Ro, all Highness resolved to halt there that Day, and the next, to give Rest to the Army, and to wait for the coming up of the Provisions; and it was settled, that on the 26th the Troops should march again to attack Meadia, which the Turks had not yet abandoned when the Express came away. The Success of this Battle is very much owing to the Great Duke, who exposed hinself Number of their Killed and Wounded, because, owing to the Great Duke, who exposed hinself in the hottest Fire of the Turks, in order to encourage his Troops to do their Duty.

As the Post was going off, 'twas reported at ienna, that there has been another Battle be-Vienna, that there tween Meadia and Orfova, in which the Imperialifts have gain'd a confiderable Victory; for the Confirmation and Particulars of which we must refer to our next.

The Hopes the Imperial Court conceive, that The Hopes the Imperial Court conceive, that this will prove a happy Campaign to them, are partly founded upon the exact Difcipline which is observed by the German Troops, and those wise Regulations which have been jublished at the Head of every Regiment, for maintaining a due Subordination, and severely punishing Cowardice. One of these Rules imports, 'That if any Regiment or other Body fails in its Duty in any Action or Siege, all the Soldiers of that Body shall be decimated; that the Officers thall be easilier'd with Insamy, and ignominishall be cashier'd with Infamy, and ignomini-ously punished, and that the Shame of such Body may be buried in Oblivion, its Colours or Standards shall be thrown into the Fire.

They write from Stockholm, That the General Dyet of that Kingdom proceeds with great Unanimity, under the Direction of the Count de Tessia, its Marshal, who, tho scarce 40 Years of Age, has gone through as much Business as nold Man. He has been twice Envoy Extraordinary at Vienna, and at every Dyet he has sate in, he has been the principal Person in the Secret Committee, in drawing up the Plan which is therein concerted for a Guide in Foreign Affairs. With all this Learning, Judgment and Experience, he has a Behaviour which makes him universally beloved, and an Integrity which neither Fear nor Hopes can alter. The Dyet has appointed Committees to examine the Alliances concluded two Years ago with Denmark and Russia, and the Reasons why the They write from Stockhelm, That the General Treaty of Alliance with France has not yet been renewed. A Committee is also appointed to inquire into the Grievances of the Protestants of Poland, who have had Recourse to his Swedish Majefly, to defire his Protection, and to support their Interests with the King and the States of Poland, at the next Dyet, which is to be held a Warfaw after the Feath of St. Michael.

As to the Int refts of the Duke of Hoffeis tis probable they will not come upon the Car-This Prince has a numerous Party in Sweden, but they who are most disposed to second his Views, do not approve that he should challenge the Right of Succession to the Crown. 'Tis very well known that his Friends have wrote to him upon the Subject, and hinted, that as the Claim is generally conditioned as an edious Affair, no more mentions. fidered as an odious Affair, no more mention ought to be made of it in the Letters which he shall write for the future to the States, than is those to their Majesties

An Acoust of LAPLAND, by certain French Methematicians, who went thither in 1736, u make Observations. Dated September 20.

A FTER arriving at Steckholm, in Twenty Days from Dunkirk, and flaying a floor time there, to examine the Curiofities of the P.ace, we fet out f r the farther Part of the Bothnick Gulph. The only remarkable Circumstance of this Part of our Journey is, that we travelled 300 Leagues in ten Days time with two Coaches, notwithstanding the many great Rivers we were obliged to cross in the way. It is true we had no Night here, nor are Travellers Rivers we were obliged to cross in the way. It is true we had no Night here, nor are Travellers hindered by any Inns upon the Road; but we were surprised to find so large and unfrequented a Tr c: with Roads as fine as those which lead a Tr c: with Roads as fine as those which lead to Versailles, cut through a Forest of prodigious Extent, and which well deserve a better Country. At the Bottom of this Road stands the Town of Tornea, inclosed with a Wall of Firr about sour or five Feet high, consisting of a sew sony Houses, in which are about fixty Inhabitants, without reckoning the Dead, who are faid every Day to re-visit their old Habitations.

WE staid in this Place about as long as we We staid in this Place about as long as we had done at Stockholm, and not finding the Sea Coasts, nor the Islands, in the Condition we could have wished, we resolved to proceed to Lapland, and there make our Triangles. It is true, that Country is no mere than a vast Defan, into which we could make our way no otherwise than by rowing up a River full of Cataracts, or passing through large Forests on Foot, without any Track to guide us, which was the more difficult, as we were incumbered with Astronomical Instruments: However, we passed through them. ficult, as we were incumbered with Astronomical Instruments: However, we passed through them, and arrived at certain Mountains, whose Tops were covered with Forests of tall Firrs; here our Busin is was to find another Mountain proper to fix the Point of our Triangles, which took us up two Months; these Triangles gave us the Degree of the Meridian which intersects the Polar Circle. Nothing now remained, but to observe the Stars at the two Extremities, and finish the Winter by measuring some Thousands of Farhoms of Ice.

In this Labour we were greatly affifted by the Strength and indetarigable Pains of the People, whom Nature has admirably fitted for People, whom Nature has admirably fitted for their Country; and in this Part of the World, where they have but little to enjoy, they have Prudence enough to be contented with little. Their Houles are made of the Trunks of Trees, covered over with the Bark, in which there is always one Room they never prefume to enter, as being the Refidence of their Deity; but upon our Arrival, without freing either the Mafter or Miltrefs of the Houfe, are were fuffered to take Possession of it; all the rest of the House was at our Service, except one miserable Corner. take Pottetion of it; an the Fet of the House was at our Service, except one miserable Corner, full of Smoke, into which the Father, Mother, Children, and all the Houshold retire together. Those Inhabitants of this Country who are best accommodated, sow a little Barley, which the Earth renders them again in the best Manner it can, at the End of six Weeks or two Months, which is all the truitful Season they have They make for their Guests a Sort of Etead, half Grain and half Straw, but what they eat themselves is chiefly made of Straw; and in bad Years, which are very frequent in this Country, they are forced to eat the Bark of First Trees. They have some Sheep and some Cows, which are kept alive with much Dissiculty in aCountry where they are forced to keep them above half the Year in the House, and to heat all the Water they drink. But they keep them only for their Milk and Wool, not knowing what it is to kill and eat them. They have less Regard for their Rain Deer, some Park of whose Bodies they dry, which, joined with some Fish which they eat raw, is their best Entertainment. Their common Food is the abovementioned Bread, very bad Butter, and sowe Fifth which they eat raw, is their belt Entertainment. Their common Food is the above-mentioned Bread, very bad Butter, and fowre Milk, which all the Houfhold eat out of the fame Piatt.r. Every one of those who affilted us, carried some of this Bread in one Bag, and another Bag full of sowre Milk, where-ever he went; and with this Provision would chearfully go to the World's End, if they were not at it already.

went; and with this Provition would chearfully go to the World's End, if they were not at it already.

Their Cloathing is, as you may well suppose, very plain; steft of all the Children go a long time almost naked, only with a Shirt upon their Bodies, with neither Stockings, Shoes, or Bonnet. The Mens Dress, which is uniform enough, is a kind of Shirt of white Wool, with a Leather Girdle, a very snall Bonnet; but their Breeches are so long, that they tuck into their Shoes; the most indispensable Part of their Garb, and which one would least expect from them, is Gloves, there being neither Peasant, Fisherman, nor Soldier, who is not always gloved, in Summer, as well as in Winter. The Women go commonly with their Feet and Legs bare; their Head Dress consists of a Bunch of Red Hair, tied up with a Ribbon of Red Wool, and have most admirable Teeth; and if this Beauty be owing to the Sobriety of their Lives, our Paris Beauties would soon take to Bread and Water, did they but consider what an Addition such Teeth would be to their Features.

did they but consider what an Addition such Teeth would be to their Features.

Aster all this, I must inform you, That the People I have been speaking of are not the Native Laplanders, but some poor Foreign Families, who have settled upon the Banks of the Rivers; for as soon as you leave the River, you enter the Desarts, where the native People are so hideous, that those I have mentioned are perfect Sybarites* to them. We met with some of them seeding their Rain Deer upon the Mountains: They are almost as little as they are said to be, and much uglier; insomuch that some of them frightened us, particularly a Woman, who the other Day entered into my Chamber, without my being able to prevent the Visit. Every body in Sweden is persuaded they have frequent Commerce with the Devil; and I am of opinion that thefe People look as like his Correspondents as any in the Universe. His Swedish Majesty recommended it to us at our taking leave of him, to examine a little into the Truth of what is to generally reported of them, with regard to Ma-gick. I cannot tell whether they know Future Even:s, but am fure they are grofly ignorant of every thing past and present: The Easets of the Kings, and the Prohibitions of the Ministers Kings, and the Prohibitions of the Ministers who have bytised some Laplanders, have diminished the Number of Conjurers among them, or at least have obliged them to practite their Art with much more Secrety than formerly. But yet many conclude, that some among them are deeply versed in Magick, and the Freethinkers affert that the Laplanders perform all their Wonders by White Magick only, without any Intercourse with the Devil.

The Rain Deer are as beautiful, as the Laplanders are ghastly; They are a kind of sine Staggs, which render them a thousand Services, in feeding, cloathing, drawing, and carrying

Staggs, which render them a thousand services, in feeding, cloathing, drawing, and carrying them; and they are so familiar, that we found some on the Mountains which would not leave us for three or four Leagues.

We are now at the Northern Extremity of our Triangles, waiting for the Star which is to thew us how much of the Arch of the Meridian is comprifed within our Triangles. It were greatly to be wifned, that the Observations had been made before the excessive Colds came in, which are more insupportable here than at Tornea: Winter in t is Place being almost a perpetual Scason, and sometimes in the Middle perpetual Season, and sometimes in the Middle of the short Summer, resumes its Power: Instances of which we have had during our Stay in these Mountains, where, during very hot Days, when the Sun was not at all clouded, on a sudden the Winter has returned with most piercing Cold. To enclude, it is the Winter only that gives a just I dea of this Country, at which time the Laplanders return to their Habitations on the Mountains, from whence they are driven during the Hot Season by an inconceivable Quantity of Flies, which were very troublesome to us. troublefome to us.

They write from Barbadoes, That in March last there were upwards of 3000 Persons in that Island down in the Small-Pox; where Inoculation is practised with great Success. They add, that there is a Prospect of a fine Crop of Sugar throughout all the Islands. And also confirm that Sr. Piers, the principal City on the Island of Martinico, is totally consumed by Fire.

They write from Boston in New-England, That in March last a Man inadvertently swallow'd Two of his Children: The Manner of his doing it was thus: His Wife had lately miscarried of Twins; and the Gossips and she becarried of Twins; and the Gossips and she being willing to preserve the two little Embryo's, bought half a Pint of Rum, and put it in a Bottle, into which they thrust these two small People, but unknown to the Husband: It happened one Evening as he was looking about, he found the Bottle, took out the Cork, and finding it was Rum, by the Smell, and making no farther Enquiry, directly swallow'd it down, well pleased to discover his Wise's Heard.

COUNTRY NEWS

Colchefter, July 14. Yesterday se'nnight, a melancholy Accident happened at Stratford, 6 Miles from hence, viz. A Boy about 11 Years old, being placed in a Corn Field with a Clapper to frighten Birds from destroying the Wheat, and a Girl about 18 Years old, with a loaded Gun for the same Purpose, the Girl in a jesting way, presented the Piece at the Boy, and said she would shoot him, who in Return, attempted to strike her with his Clapper, and hitting the Trigger, the Gun went off, and shot him into the Body, in so miserable a Manner, that his Bowels gushed out, notwithstanding which, he linger'd till the next Day, and then expired. Last Week a Fellow in the same Neighbourhood, being difappointed in a Love Affair, hang'd himfelf with his Garters upon a Tree, and being feen by a Person at a small Distance, he climb'd the Tree and cut him down, to whom the Fellow relating the Cause of his committing this rash Act, he tetch'd a Whip, and lac'd h m very smartly, till his Senses coming into good Order, he begged that he might not receive any further Discipline of that Sort, and that for the future he would behave in a Manner no way deferving the Lash.

Norwich, July 15. Last Tuesday died Thomas Newton, Etq. Alderman of East Wymer Ward, who was Sheriff in the Year 1716, and Mayor in 1722: And Yesterday came on the Election of an Alderman in his Room: The Candidares were Mr. Simeon Waller, late Sheriff of this City, and Mr. Wigg. The Election was carry'd on with some Warmth, the Tories exer ing their utmost Efforts: But on casting up the Poll, the Numbers flood thus:

Mr. Waller 355
Mr. Wigg — 320

Odds 35

This feems a compleat Victory for many Years: And in Half an Hour after the Polls were over, the City was as quiet as if no Election had been, which flews the Advantage of choosing those Men in the true Interest of his Majesty and our present happy Establishment.
